This artwork is called lunchroom. It is by Casey Gray.
It is an Easy Read mixed-media artwork where the audience is invited to participate.
It has 3 sections that make it complete

1. Easy Read tea towels
2. a serving tray
3. paper placemats

Easy Read Tea towels
Easy Read Tea towel (Triptych or Part 1) Donut
Easy Read Tea towel (Triptych or Part 2) Fudgement
Easy Read Tea towel (Triptych or Part 3) Judith Scott the Mad Rapper and communi-tea

The artist made up words for the last two tea towels.
Artists have fun playing with words when they make art.
It is okay not to know the words.
You can think about the names.
Think about what the names mean to the artist.
Or talk with someone about what these names mean to you.
There is no right or wrong answer.

Digital graphic design outsourced fabric print, colour 50% white cotton/linen blend. Printed on Wurundjeri Country.
69 × 50 cm

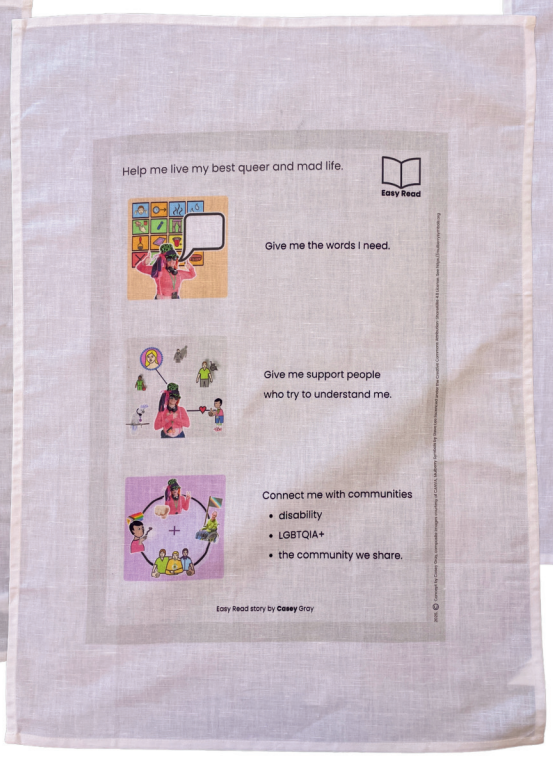

Upcycled 'Ally' serving tray.
Upcycle means I got an old tray and made it new again.
Arcrylic paint on wood
430 x 260 x 66 mm

Paper placemats
Digital graphic design Printed on 80GSM
220 x 390 mm

lunchroom

donuts

communi-tea

fudgement

Here is what the artwork could look like in a real workplace lunchroom.

The tea towels have been used.

They hang in different places to dry around the kitchen.

The placemats are in the ally serving tray on the table.

Some are being used as placemats on the table.

Some placemats have pencils on them.

People have been doodling on them while they sit and eat.

There are things you find in a lunchroom too like

- chairs at the table
- a lunch box
- a water bottle
- a sunflower lanyard
- and a banana.

